

EFFECTS OF THE JUBILEE.

ENGLAND STRENGTHENED IN THE EYES OF ALL EUROPE.

The Queen's Safety and Security Envyed By the Czar of Russia—How Looked Upon By the Sultan and the Kaiser. London Press Opinions—Foreign News.

LONDON, June 28.—Now that the principal ceremonies attending the celebration of the queen's jubilee are over, curious persons are endeavoring to estimate the effect of yesterday's unparalleled demonstration upon the current political questions of Europe as well as its influence in shaping the future policy of many of the powers. Although Queen Victoria's womanly pride and vanity were strongly appealed to in yesterday's events, it cannot be denied that she is too astute not to have seen in the great and really spontaneous outburst of patriotism and loyalty and reverence for herself displayed by the people the great advantage the exhibition must secure to England.

Such popular demonstrations of affection for a sovereign are not of every day occurrence, and the monarch to whom such token is addressed, is entirely safe in assuming that its object is greatly raised on the esteem and consideration of other potentates, be they hostile or not. The spectacle presented will have its effects upon the czar of Russia, the sultan of Turkey, the emperor of Germany and the president of the French, in proportion as their respective interests are affected by the moral strength of England. The czar, who is in danger of losing the tip of his nose if he pokes it out of his palace window, cannot but view with dismay the spectacle of a sovereign proceeding in state through the streets of her capital in perfect security, while the voices of millions of her subjects are raised to do her honor; the sultan, who alternately wavers between a lukewarm friend for England and a discreet policy of conciliation toward Russia, must see the advantage in cultivating closer relations with England; the emperor, who sees his eldest son and the heir to the throne next to Queen Victoria, the most conspicuous figure in the pageant, and observes that the queen treated him before the world with almost motherly tenderness, must feel a throbbing affection in his withered heart for the nation whose sovereign has thus publicly attested her regard, and the president of the French republic cannot but feel a chill of apprehension as he contemplates the possibility of an Anglo-German alliance growing out of the affectionate reception and prominence given to the crown prince by England's ruler.

Many of the happenings in and out of Westminster abbey were highly suggestive of great political possibilities and one may be excused for thinking that perhaps they were premeditated. Certainly they were not lost upon many thoughtful minds and it is reasonably safe to predict that they will bear fruit which England will gather as the crop ripens.

Nobody breathed easily until they got news that the jubilee ceremony was over, and that there had been no casualty, for there has been widespread fear that some accident or panic would occur there, owing to the masses of new scaffolding and the dense throng. There still remained some nervous of a less excusable sort about a possible dynamite outrage. Probably the crowd which waited for her return on Constitution Hill had this most in mind, for Queen Victoria's life has been attempted four times at this very favorable spot. So firmly fixed has been this expectation of dynamite outrages that a wealthy Tennessee lady, who has not a drop of Irish blood in her veins, has been shadowed for seven weeks on suspicion that she was a dynamiter.

The Daily Telegraph commenting on the jubilee celebration says: "The jubilee has come and gone in a blaze of pleasure. Queen Victoria has been greeted with such cheers, love, reverence and benediction that no crowned head ever before received."

The Standard says: "That the ceremony was a splendid success none will deny. Never within the memory of the present generation has England witnessed anything to compare with it."

The Times says that only those who lived through it can realize the wondrous thrill of this passion of festivity.

The Morning Post declares that no sovereign ever received such a sincere testimonial of respect, affection and loyalty.

The Daily News says the pageant was worthy of the country and occasion, and the truth will not allow the soberest chronicler to say less. The queen's welcome was the most magnificent ever had.

Illness of Mrs. Blaine.

LONDON, June 28.—The illness of Mrs. Blaine may alter the junketing plans of the ex-ambassador. She suffered her first prostration Sunday. Mrs. Blaine took to bed and being considerably worse Monday, Dr. Verndon was summoned. She arose for a few moments yesterday to view the pageant as it passed the hotel. Unable to endure the tedious wait for the queen's cortege, however, she was led back to her couch. None but the most intimate friends have secured an audience with her and all social invitations have been disregarded. The nature of her malady is not stated.

Opinion of the Crown Prince.

BERLIN, June 28.—The crown prince telegraphed to the emperor from London last night announcing the grand success of the jubilee, and assuring the emperor of the improved condition of his health. The emperor was highly gratified. He was warmly cheered by the people whenever he appeared at his window. His health is normal and his appetite good. He sleeps well, without the aid of potions, and is able to attend to his routine duties.

Children at a Picnic.

LONDON, June 28.—Thousands of children are marching from all points toward Hyde Park, where the children's picnic is being held to-day as a continuance of the jubilee festivities. The little ones are decked in their holiday attire, and in their white dresses, adorned with variegated colored ribbons, present a charming picture. The weather is fine, with a bright sunshine and a cooling breeze.

Bridge Jumper Discharged.

LONDON, June 28.—Larry Donovan, the bridge jumper, who was yesterday prevented from jumping from the Clifton suspension bridge, and taken into custody on a charge of attempting suicide, was to-day discharged, having procured sureties for his good behavior.

Love and Replevin Suit Settled.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Justice La Buy yesterday disposed of a love and replevin case. Mary Kobza sued Constantine Janick to recover her wardrobe. She claims that some time ago she met Janick, who proposed marriage. She accepted him and he went on and had himself measured for a wedding outfit, buying a wedding ring for her. She in turn sent her clothing to his house. They were to have been married next Tuesday. She, however, changed her mind and concluded to remain single. She demanded her effects, and he refused to surrender them. Hence the suit. She was awarded judgment.
